THE ACADEMY PHILOSOPHY

To provide the modeller with a wide range of affordable state-of-the-art plastic model kits that range from the historical to the newest technological equipment.

A short history on the manufacture of plastic kits

When hobby kits were first introduced about 1937, the injection molds were produced from oversized wooden patterns, plaster castings and a pantographic milling machine to mechanically reduce and remove the excess metal from the mold. All detail had to be engraved into the mold cavities which resulted in over-sized raised rivets and heavy standing panel lines on the molded parts. Some makers still use this method!

In the '70s a greatly improved method of tooling was introduced using beryllium patterns made to the same scale as the kit. These beryllium patterns were then "burned" into the steel of the molds by electrostatic discharge resulting in a slightly roughened surface, but the panel lines and rivets were finally recessed, eliminating much sanding and polishing on the part of the serious modeler. Many makers use this method to produce their tooling.

A few years ago, a vastly improved method of tooling was adopted by Academy and the other industry leaders. To produce "cast copper" molds, the fully engraved steel patterns are used to cast a copper-beryllium alloy block which becomes the mold cavity. Cast copper molds are more costly, but the results are worth the investment. Only this method can produce really fine, discreetly engraved lines and smooth polished surfaces.

When new technology becomes available that will result in still better quality, you can be sure that Academy will be one of the first manufacturers to use the technology.

LIMITED EDITION ZODIAC B-24H LIBERATOR BOMBERS

There are many famous examples of individual World War II Nose-Art, but only one squadron was as well known for its collection of outstanding Nose Art. The 834th Bomb Squadron of the 486th Bomb Group had a total of eleven B-24H Liberators adorned with the art work of Phil Brinkman who designed and painted the individual signs of the Zodiac. Four of these planes have been illustrated by Roy Grinnell, the very well known aviation artist from Tuscon, Arizona. Aquaria, Aries, Gemini and Leo have been selected as the subjects of these four Limited Edition kits.

Each kit, whose total production will be strictly limited to 5,000 pieces for world-wide consumption, contains a serial numbered, hand silk-screened decal utilizing as many as 15 colors to accurately reproduce the artwork. Each kit also contains a full color 16" x 20" poster of the Grinnell artwork suitable for framing. This state-of-the-art kit features all recessed panel lines and a highly detailed interior.
